To whom it may concern,

We strongly recommend Elizabeth Zanetti and her family's childcare center, Elibunny. Our two-year-old daughter is currently enrolled at Elibunny, she has been going since she was about 6 months old, and our experience these 19 months from September 2020 until the present has been extremely positive.

When Elizabeth describes her care as "family," it is literal. This is also Elibunny's greatest strength. Elizabeth's only care providers and educators are her family, which ensures a great deal of experience and continuity that we did not find with any programs when we were interviewing. We also feel that the whole family looks after our daughter as though she belonged to them. Although we have not been able to visit the inside of the daycare center often during the pandemic, it is obvious that our daughter learns a lot and enjoys her time there. Being around other children in such a nurturing setting has been crucial for her development, as my wife and I take our health responsibilities quite seriously and her close contact with non-family members is otherwise limited.

Speaking of covid-related precautions, everything about our experience with Elibunny exemplifies their care. Relative to other day care providers of which we are aware, Elizabeth and her family are rather strict: children need to be free of fever and other infectious symptoms for longer than other centers before they can return to care, and when the center has been closed for health reasons, they are not as quick to open as some providers have been. However, this caution has paid off: as of this writing, there have been no covid outbreaks at the center, and we believe that track record is thanks to Elizabeth and her family's approach to protecting all the children. We also appreciate Elizabeth's approach to communication: the daily reports have good information, and communication about policies and payments is extremely thoughtful and professional.

We also find the setting to fit our daughter's outgoing, playful personality. The team at Elibunny does an excellent job reinforcing the lessons we are trying to teach at home, such as early alphabet familiarity. We were delighted to discover some of what Maddie is learning, like dancing and singing a wide range of songs. Elizabeth's family welcomes the changing seasons and holidays with crafts and other fun enrichment activities. During the winter holidays our first year, were certainly not expecting the thoughtful gifts that arrived—not just for our daughter, but for our whole family. However, that family-style approach is completely consistent with the rest of our experience.

We recommend Elibunny highly and without reservation. If you would like to get in touch, please feel free to email us.
